

National Football League

Dear Michael Vick,by MARK GREY7.5.10

Let me start off by saying I have been a fan of yours ever since the first time I saw you play at Virginia Tech. We both started college the same year, and while I was a Terp and you were a Hokie, I always found it much easier to root for you than anyone who played for my school. I saw so much of myself in you that I felt like I had no choice but to cheer for you. You were the true definition of "keeping it real," you were like the second coming of Allen Iverson only in football. They used to criticize you because you were not the traditional drop back passer but you didn't care, you just kept doing your thing and racking up award after award and the wins kept coming in. Have you ever found yourself thinking that life just wasn't fair? Like no matter how hard you worked, you just couldn't get a break? Like no matter how much good you did, you were always blamed for everything? Even though the deck seems to be stacked against you, for some reason, everyone expects you to succeed? Like you're the most under appreciated person in town? And just when you ask yourself can things get any worse, you get your answer: yes they can. Welcome to Jason Campbell's world. Spring is here which can only mean one thing in the Nation's capitol, there is no better time to be a Redskins fan. There are two things that come out every spring in the Washington DC area without fail: cherry blossoms and Dan Snyder's wallet. For more than a decade now, Snyder has used the off-season as his personal shopping spree to bring in some of the biggest names in football. Despite preaching a new way of doing things around Redskins Park, the team has once again made the biggest off-season move. While last weeks trade for McNabb will be the biggest of the entire off season, what the Redskins do next will really tell if anything has changed at all. Read More ...
